Life Begins Anew

Medium: Watercolor & Ink

Artist Statement:

The world has caused many of the natural wildlife of the Seattle area to be moved from their original habitats, and through this artwork I have brought back the orcas in Puget Sound and created a better environment in which they would thrive without interference. Also due to climate change the world may cause oceans to rise which could potentially cause devastation to the buildings in Seattle. The main meaning of this art piece is to think of the possible outcomes of the decisions we make as humans.

Description:

Through the use of watercolors, pencils, and pens I have created a piece of art that shows vibrant colors, shape, definition, and value. This piece of artwork means the world to me, quite literally, because I have always viewed global climate change as an important issue in our society that is becoming increasingly more important to tackle, not only for ourselves, but also to prevent further animal extinctions. Using Seattle as an example, it brings the severity into the situation with it being so close to home.
