Artist Statement

Art can act as a way to escape from our reality, creating worlds and people not only within the physical aspect of the piece but also within every viewer's mind. This piece was born from the influence of many fantasy based books, especially those with strong and complex woman protagonists. I've always been the type of person to get caught up in a daydream, pretending I'm the heroine of a story of my making. That's what I wanted to convey, the fact that even as the world is crumbling around you, there is no reason to give up. Anyone can be the person to stand against evil, they can be the hero of their own story.
