The Wingless, Faceless Fairy

Medium: Oil paint

Artist Statement

This piece is supposed to represent how empty one feels when they hide their true face and personality to be able to "fit in" society. The center of the canvas shows the wingless, faceless fairy. Her face is blank so that she may mirror whoever she is talking to, the spot of yellow are the little fairies who embraced who they are and are playing around with each other. The soft shade of green are to represent a building jealousy of those around the wingless, faceless fairy. The blue and pink flowers are to show how soft yet powerful gender roles in society are, even if they are always important. The main fairy's coloring is to show a calm cold mirror like personality that plays in to her blank face.

Description

The fore ground shows two bushes with flowers, the center shows a faceless humanoid. The back ground has a tree and soft blue skies with yellow almost glowing dots.
